

The Marta and Austin Weeks Music Library

The newest and largest branch of the University of Miami Libraries showcases a wide range of resources. Among the nationally known collections housed in the 22,500 square-foot facility are sound recordings, musical theater archives, musical scores, musical manuscripts, research collections, and a wealth of e-resources. This state-of-the-art research facility was built at a cost of $9.9 million. Situated at the edge of Lake Osceola, the Weeks Music Library supports the learning and research needs of the members of the Phillip and Patricia Frost School of Music, the University's Coral Gables campus, and the wider local, regional, and international music communities.
